paul hamlyn foundation
special project

Musical Futures brings non-formal teaching and informal learning approaches into schools. It aims to make music learning relevant to young people, connect in-school and out-of-school experiences, and find ways of engaging all 11–18 year olds in sustainable music-making and learning.

Musical Futures: An Approach to Teaching and Learning guides teachers and practitioners through the ethos and approach of Musical Futures, providing practical advice and a range of resources, including:

- ◊ Interactive guide to whole-group classroom workshoping
- ◊ Practical resources for exploring the transition from Wider Opportunities to Musical Futures
- ◊ Guide to songwriting in schools
- ◊ New audio resources, including Coldplay, Kings of Leon and Kaiser Chiefs
- ◊ Advice on: managing space, equipment and music technology; co-constructing a curriculum with your students; personalising extra-curricular activities; and dealing with external observers
- ◊ Plus updated practical advice and guidance on all aspects of Musical Futures

“I hope more music teachers will feel sufficiently inspired by these resources to try them in their schools.”

(STING, MUSICAL FUTURES PATRON)

“Musical Futures is regarded as one of the major advances in music-teaching pedagogy in this country since the turn of the century”

(PETER STEDMAN, CLASSROOM MUSIC MAGAZINE).

“We need to make sure that as many schools as possible have the chance to be part of Musical Futures.” (ESTELLE MORRIS – FORMER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EDUCATION AND MINISTER FOR THE ARTS)
